FINDING ADVENTURE IN JUNK
By Annie Correal

One afternoon, six-year-old Robbie was playing on a junk heap. The heap contained old doors, broken chairs, car tires and pieces of wood. While his mother was watching, Robbie climbed to the top and waved happily.

This was not an ordinary junk heap waiting for a garbage truck, but an adventure playground organized by parents in New York. Unlike traditional playgrounds with swings and slides, an adventure playground has lots of junk.

The idea is to let children move the junk around the playground in any way they like. They can build their own worlds and then destroy them. In this way, children not only develop their imagination, but also learn to use real tools.

Marsha Clark, Robbie's mother, says, "Although the place may look unsafe, it isn't. We remove dangerous things like sharp nails." But, for the children, the idea of danger is part of the attraction.

The playground is for children six years and older. Trained college students watch the children closely, but help only when necessary. Parents must sign a letter giving children permission to enter the playground.

Why do children need an adventure playground? Marsha explains: "Many parents today have forgotten how valuable it is to walk around freely and create new things. This is exactly what kids can do in adventure playgrounds." One father proudly tells about his seven-year-old daughter Shelly. "She built an airplane from wood all by herself. She played with it for hours," he says.

Playing with junk is natural for children; it is the parents who need to learn not to interfere. "It's hard for us," Marsha says. "But, if we want our kids to be curious, tough and brave, they need opportunities to experience the real world by themselves."
