PART I: ACCESS TO INFORMATION FROM WRITTEN TEXTS (70 points) Read the text below and then answer questions 1-8.

THE PROBLEM OF BEES IN THE CITY

When police officer Melissa Harper is working on the streets of New York, she doesn't wear a police uniform. Instead, she is covered from head to toe in a protective suit. And no wonder. Her job is to capture the huge swarms of bees — often thousands in one group — that appear in spring on the city streets.

5 "I'm well trained for this," she says. "On the farm where I grew up, I looked after the beehives from the age of ten."

The New York Police Department decided it needed an expert on bees seven years ago, after many New Yorkers started keeping beehives on the roofs of their apartment buildings. The hobby became popular following an earlier trend of planting gardens on the city's rooftops. "People are always trying to get closer to nature," says Harper. "Some of them also hope to make a bit of money by selling honey to local restaurants." However, she adds, most of the people who keep bees in the city are amateurs who don't have enough knowledge to do it properly. And that's where the trouble begins.

According to Harper, one thing all beekeepers need to deal with is the influence of seasonal changes. Throughout the winter, she explains, the bees mostly sleep and there is almost no growth in the hive's population. When spring comes, they become fully active again, and their numbers increase so much that the hive becomes overcrowded. In nature, about half the bees leave their home in a swarm to find a place to build a new one. In hives kept by professional beekeepers, this does not happen since the beekeepers use various methods to prevent swarming.

New York's amateur beekeepers, on the other hand, don't know how to prevent their bees from swarming. As a result, every spring Harper has to deal with about 30 swarms a week. "While bees in a swarm are usually not aggressive, they do occasionally attack when they feel threatened," she says. "Besides, new homes must be provided for the captured swarms, and that involves a lot of work and costs a lot of money." She believes amateur beekeepers should be registered with the city authorities and receive proper training. "That," she explains, "will help minimize both the potential harm to residents and the expenses to the city."
